

Summary

- What percentage of reviews are positive?

Answer:

Based on my analysis, approximately 88.35% (4406 out of 4987) of the reviews are positive, as seen in the sentiment distribution charts.

- What do customers mostly complain about in negative reviews?

Answer:

Customers mostly complain about issues related to taste, product quality, and specific ingredients in their negative reviews, with terms like 'br', 'like', 'product', 'taste', 'food', and 'flavor' being most common (as shown in the 'Most Common Words in Negative Reviews' chart).

- What surprised you in the data?

Answer:

What surprised me in the data was that 'Neutral' sentiment reviews still exhibit a relatively high median 'Score' (around 4), suggesting that a lack of strong positive or negative emotion doesn't necessarily equate to a low rating.

- One recommendation for the business based on your findings

Answer:

One recommendation for the business based on these findings is to closely monitor and address customer feedback regarding taste and product consistency, especially for items frequently mentioned in negative reviews, as these appear to be primary drivers of dissatisfaction.
